The executive-as-architect grid.

Four moves, four roles. Each column was, in its day, the right answer, so the grid passes no judgment. It takes five minutes to fill out, one row at a time: answer for today, not for where you think you ought to be.

Circle your cell on each row: ○ today ● in six months

	1 · CUSTOMER (RUN)	2 · SPONSOR (BUILD)	3 · PRACTITIONER (INNOVATE)	4 · ARCHITECT (AGENTIC)
Understand	◯ I delegate the topic to IT	◯ I approve projects	◯ I can tell what responds from what decides	◯ I know which unwritten rule is holding my function back
Practice	◯ I receive dashboards	◯ I ask for dashboards	◯ I use an assistant myself every week	◯ my team sees me do it; I read the takeovers
Decide	◯ I fund	◯ I relay the change	◯ I decide fast and clear access blockers	◯ I know where the process lives and who can change it; one owner per agent
Allocate	◯ the time saved has no destination	◯ the time saved is measured	◯ the time saved is allocated	◯ the time saved is allocated, tracked, and shared with the teams

Fill out the grid twice: today, and in six months. The gap between the two is your development plan. Moving up one level on a single move—Decide, preferably—changes a transformation more than all the awareness programs combined.
