Seven ideas to take with you.

These pages have put a great many tools in your hands. Only seven ideas govern them.

1 The hybrid enterprise — the new operating model
Humans and agents producing together, and now needing to be governed together.

2 Calibrated delegation — the operating principle
The goal is not to delegate more but to delegate well: broadly when the result is verifiable and the error reversible; narrowly when judgment, repair, or legitimacy is at stake.

3 The control tower — the management system
See, test, allocate. One page per agent, one owner per page.

4 The token and the dividend — the economic trade-off
Intelligence is consumed, billed, and budgeted. Cost is managed; the dividend is decided, and its human share (supervising, learning, passing on knowledge) is budgeted.

5 The enterprise's memory — the strategic asset
The loops that make intelligence useful accumulate somewhere: with you, or with someone else.

6 Human roles — the accountability layer
The accountable steward answers for what agents do, the hybrid manager absorbs the shock, and the executive as architect owns the processes the agents execute.

7 The programmable enterprise — the horizon
Capabilities exposed, composed, and sold, to humans and to their agents.

One thesis governs them all: delegate without losing agency.
